Introduction

The first checklist of digger wasps in Poland was presented in the identification key of Noskiewicz and Puławski (1960) and consisted of 188 species. The next list of species was published in the fifth volume of the „Polish Checklist of Animals” elaborated by Celary (1997) it included 209 species. The third list of species known from Poland was given by Skibińska (2004), in which 233 species were catalogued. After that, an annotated checklist was published by Wiśniowski (2004). The list contained 225 species and depicted data for them in two temporal intervals (until 1945 and since 1945).

The following publication is an updated and commented list of digger wasps in Poland based on results of research published since 2004 (Bilański et al. 2012, Bilański et al. 2014, Bury et al. 2009, Dobosz 2010, Gwardjan & Celary 2020, Jaroszewicz 2012, Mader 2013, Milkowski & Buchholz 2016, Olszewski 2014, Olszewski et al. 2013a, Olszewski et al. 2013b, Olszewski et al. 2013c, Olszewski et al. 2013d, Olszewski et al. 2016, Olszewski et al. 2017, Olszewski & Pawlikowski 2013, Olszewski & Wendzonka 2014, Olszewski et al. 2021a, Olszewski et al. 2021b, Pietraszko-Warchałowska & Warchałowski 2019, Straka 2016, Szymkiewicz & Szymkiewicz 2014, Tatur-Dytkowski 2015, Wendzonka & Żurawlew 2020, Wiśniowski et al. 2013, Zająć et al. 2019, Zubek & Celary 2019, Żyła 2019, Żyła & Huflejt 2020, Żurawlew & Butrym 2021, and Kosibowicz 2021).

The latest faunistic research was conducted in the Baltic Coast (Ciechanowski et al. 2008, Kowalczyk & Tward 2011, Olszewski & Kowalczyk 2019), Małopolska Upland (Kowalczyk et al. 2008, Kowalczyk et al. 2011, Kowalczyk & Kurzac 2005, Kowalczyk & Nadolski 2007, Kowalczyk & Szczepko 2008a, Kowalczyk & Szczepko 2008b, Soszyński et al. 2008, Szczepko & Wiśniowski 2009), Mazovian Lowland (Kowalczyk & Kurzac 2007a, Kowalczyk & Kurzac 2007b, Kowalczyk & Kurzac 2009, Szczepko 2013, Wiśniowski & Szczepko 2013), Podlasie in the Poleski National Park (Wiśniowski & Piotrowski 2013), Pomeranian Lakeland (Ciechanowski et al. 2004, Kowalczyk 2004, Olszewski & Kowalczyk 2019), Wielkopolska-Kujawy Lowland (Kowalczyk et al. 2009a, Pawlikowski & Olszewski 2019, Tward et al. 2017, Wendzonka 2011, Wendzonka 2012) and from various faunistic regions (Celary & Plewa 2014, Kowalczyk et al. 2009b, Sawoniewicz & Wiśniowski 2007).

Although recent research of Sann et al. (2018) presents a new classification of digger wasps based on a phylogenomic analysis of the Apoidea with ten separate families, the nomenclature and systematic arrangements in this publication was adopted in accordance with ‘Catalog of Sphecidae’ sensu lato (Puławski 2021). The comments give mainly location data since 2004, assigned to relevant zoogeographical regions according to the ‘Polish Catalogue of Fauna’ (Banaszak 1980). Species within families and zoogeographical regions were sorted in alphabetical order.

In the following checklist five species are marked with a question mark (?). Three of them, namely Harpactus formosus, Tachysphex jokischianus and T. nobilis, need taxonomic verification of their status. Another species, Isodontia mexicana, was probably incidentally introduced by man, and Sceliphron caementarium was observed close to Ukrainian border, and is probably a recent immigrant from Ukraine. Still the occurrence of local populations of both species in Poland is possible.

Skibińska (2002) included 80 species of Spheciformes in ‘Red list of threatened animals in Poland’ (RL). Four of them were listed in category EX? (probably Extinct), four represented CR category (Critically Endangered), three species were in the category EN (Endangered), and eleven were classified as VU (Vulnerable). More species (34) represented the category NT (Near Threatened), and six were in the category LC (Least Concern). Another eighteen species were in DD category (Data Deficient).

In the present paper we present a verified list of threatened digger wasps in Poland, based on own observations as well as threat status in neighbouring countries. The current list includes 92 species. Among them there are ten Critically Endangered (CR) and six Endangered (EN). Another six species were classified as Vulnerable (VU); twelve species represent the category NT (Near Threatened), and 25 represent the category LC (Least Concern). The status DD (Data Deficient) was ascribed to 33 species because there is still inadequate information to make a more precise assessment of their threat status.

104. H. pulchellus A. Costa, 1859

= Harpactus morawitzi Radoszkowski, 1884

New records from the Wielkopolska-Kujawy Lowland (Olszewski et al. 2017, Pawlikowski & Olszewski 2019) and Lower Silesia: Strupina ($51^{\circ}23'N$, $16^{\circ}48'E$), 1♀ – 26 VII 2008, leg. M. L. Borowiec.

Remarks: Mokrousov & Popov (2016: 569) regarded H. morawitzi as a junior synonym of H. pulchellus. They did not discuss the synonymy in detail but their proposal for falling of morawitzi with synonymy under pulchellus is correct. The third author (TL) had studied the type of H. pulchellus in the collection of Achille Costa in the Università degli Studi di Napoli Federico II, Museo Zoologico in Napoli (Italy) as well as the type of Harpactus morawitzi in the Zoologisches Museum an der Humboldt-Universität in Berlin and confirmed that they are conspecific. H. pulchellus described by a single male from Italy (Campania: San Felice a Cancello) has first and second metasomal terga red and by this reason had been treated as a different (and unique in term of colour pattern) species by all subsequent authors. It is well known that many species of Harpactus exhibit colour-marking polymorphism and H. pulchellus is one of the most highly polymorphic in colour and markings even within a single population. For this reason it has been recognized through the years in Europe as different species such as formosus, morawitzi, moravicus. The recognition of the species from its closest relative, laevis, is based upon a lack of micropunctuation on the apical half of the second metasomal tergum both in females (Fig. 1) and males (Fig. 2) and in shorter basal flagellar segments in females and shorter apical flagellar segments in males.

RL: Maintained category NT (Skibińska 2002).
